The Fundamental Test: "For Me to Live is . . . ?"

If we know how any man would complete that broken sentence the filling-in would tell us everything. That unfilled gap waits for the insertion of everybody's secret. What is my main desire in life? Where does my supreme purpose gather its forces? Where does it concentrate its quest? What do I live for? Life to me is . . . what? Let me put my biggest thing in the gap, and let me closely consider the completed sentence. "For to me to live is . . .?"

First of all, then, let us complete the broken sentence in this way: "For to me to live is money." That is how multitudes of men and women would fill up the gap if they inserted the secret spring of their life. They think about money. They dream about money. They surrender every power to it. It steals into every plan and practice. It shines before them on the horizon. It colors every interest. It fashions every judgment. Everything is tested by monetary value, and without a monetary value a thing is counted worthless. And so this is the brief and pregnant biography of those who live after this manner: "For to me to live is—money." They live for it. They make it. They leave it. "Thou fool."

There are others who, if they were to inscribe their vital secret, would fill up the gap in this way: "For to me to live is worldly honor." They hunger and thirst for it. They wait at every corner for it. They long for a place in the sun. They must be written about. They must be talked about. They seek to be courted and flattered. They covet the uppermost places titles. They wear the withering garlands of men," and they only count themselves alive when they bask in the sunshine of to live is—worldly honor." Such is the coronal flower of a well-cultivated life, and the flower no sooner begins to bloom than it begins to fade away.

Here is another man revealing his central secret in this completed sentence: "For to me to live is knowledge." Such men are explorers in the treasured fields of learning. Sometimes the exploration is intensive, and it dwells in the atom. Sometimes it is extensive, and it ranges over continents. But whether it be in the inch or in the mile, the quest absorbs all the scattered energies and interests of their life. All their powers gather together here. They are mobilised for knowledge, and for nothing else. The quest is one of fine adventure. It is full of surprises, it abounds in kindling joys and inspirations. But, after all, knowledge is only a secondary thing, and when it assumes the first place it is usurping the throne of another. "Whether there be know-ledge, it shall vanish away." Life must be balanced by a worthier quest.

And what about this for an unveiling of the secret thing in life: "For to me to live is ease." That is the main thing in life. To escape its appointed burdens. To slip through the days with as little trouble as possible. To avoid everything irksome. Never to go down the long, dull street where pains and labor dwell. Never to go gather-

Make This Prayer Thine Own.

May every soul that touches mine,
Be it the slightest contact, get therefrom some good.

Some little grace, one kindly thought;
One inspiration yet unfelt, one bit of courage
To brave the thickening ills of life;
One glimpse of brighter skies beyond the gathering

To make this life worth while, And Heaven a surer heritage.

ing fruit where the nettles grow. Never to climb a steep cliff for the eagle's feather. Never to go courting social duties. Never to enlist in anything which may fetch blood. Never to go anywhere near the valley of the shadow of death. "To keep in the warm sunshine, that's the thing!" To go quietly through one's days in comfort and never to go seeking trouble! That is my policy. "For to me to live is—ease." And a miserably poor policy it is. A life of that sort is not a triumphant march. It is not even a stately walk. It is a wretched slouch, and it ends in spiritual dinginess and death.

And now, in contrast with all these secret things and many others like them, look at the great absorption which inspires and possesses the life of the apostle Paul. What is life to him? "For to me to live is Christ." Other sentences have balanced themselves in this fashion: Life-money! Life-worldly honor! Life-ease! But here is this man's equivalent: Life-Christ! To this man life is Christ and nothing else. To be Christless is to be lifeless. Only as Christ pervades anything does the thing begin to live. And therefore the apostle exults in a life which in everything seeks to reveal and glorify Christ. Everything must let Christ through. Every flying moment must yield an eternal secret. Every interest must find its supreme value and color in the Lord. Christ must inspire a man's judgments, kindle his desires, create and direct his affections. Christ must be sought in everything, and through everything, and in everything he must be glorified. That is what this man lives for, and the ambition is one which cannot be quenched when his earthly days are over. Nay, death only opens the portals to a richer realisation of life, for he knows that when Christ shall be manifested he also will be manifested with him in glory. And therefore he sings as he goes along his way, "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain."-Dr. J. H. Jowett.

Housing the Preacher.

Churches of Christ in Australia - have made considerable advance in recent years. The increase in membership has been accompanied by a corresponding increase in the number of buildings erected for the worship and service of God. There has been manifested also a new desire to provide suitable residences for our preachers. It seems but a few years since a beginning was made in this direction. Now, many churches have made this provision, and are finding joy and reward in more efficient service being rendered under happier conditions. Lygon-st. church, Melbourne, has recently come into line, having purchased the attractive and comfortable home depicted on this page.

Advantage to the preacher.

From the preacher's point of view, it will be seen that there is a great advantage in the occupation of a church home. When entering upon a new work, he is spared the weary days and weeks of searching. It has been a great problem in many centres for any one to secure a suitable house; and when, as is the case of the preacher, there is the necessity or strong desirability of locating within easy reach of the church building, the trouble is accentuated. It has often happened that much time has been wasted in house-hunting. This loss of time when there is an awakened interest (as there generally is) with the advent of a new preacher is a serious thing.

Again, if there is no church home, the preacher, unless he is one of the fortunate ones able to pay a substantial deposit and arrange to buy his own house, is liable to receive notice, and house-hunting with all its attendant woes and waste of time begins over again. The added expense of this to a preacher probably already finding it difficult to pay his way is a cause of anxiety. Moving costs money; floor coverings will not fit the new house; we have a proverb about so many moves being equal to a fire in the damage done to furniture. We are glad that an increasing number of churches are seeing that their preacher is relieved of these unnecessary burdens.

There is the additional advantage for the preacher that the church is not likely to wish to make any profit out of the preacher's house, and so can let him have better rent terms than a private landlord would be likely to demand.

Gain to the church.

While we have just stated some advantages to the preacher, it must not be forgotten that the church itself may benefit much by the possession of a preacher's home. The house itself may be a fair investment. A moderate rent can be charged for it which will repay interest and upkeep, so that it is not a drain on church finance.

It is generally much more easy in church life to raise money for a special effort than for current expenses, and so there should be no difficulty in securing a sufficient deposit to make purchase easy, and to ensure that even a very low rent will much more than pay the interest bill. After a few years, the church will possess a valuable asset which has cost it very little.

The church, too, has a say about the preacher's location. He can be placed where his presence is considered most likely to be helpful, within easy reach of the people amongst whom he will be working. Often members and friends wish to get into touch with the preacher, and it is well if for their sakes and his the means of approach are easy.

We have referred above to the saving of time for the preacher. But the church gains at least as much as he does. House-hunting and removals interfere with work, and the church has called the preacher to work. For its own sake, therefore, it should make such arrangements as will enable service to be rendered with the maximum of satisfaction to both sides.

We are glad to think, too, that churches are manifesting a greater desire than ever before that the preacher's lot be made happier and more comfortable. It is sadly true that in the past, and, in the great majority of cases, up to the present, our preachers have had a great difficulty in paying their way and providing things honest in the sight of all men. A preacher dare not appear meanly dressed. He must practise as well as preach the duty of Christian hospitality. He must help the poor. must be a student and buy books. To most of our preachers the endeavor to do these things as they should be done for the work's sake is a task impossible of achievement with the remuneration provided. Some good men have been forced to seek secular em ployment, though they would gladly have continued to give their whole time to the service of the church. Churches may therefore be encouraged to provide residences for their preachers, and, by letting them be spared the burden of high rents, relieve them of financial strain. Later, when the house is paid for, the church will be in the position of either remitting the rent, or, if it prefer, of adding otherwise to the remuneration given. For its own sake, the church may be recommended to do this, for no man who is continually embarrassed financially can do his best work.

It is a pleasure to us to note the signs of advance in the brotherhood.

The New Testament.

The New Testament, as Dr. Denney used to say, is the most hopeful book in the whole world. I believe that God is everywhere revealed - in every flower in the crannied wall. But I do not believe that he is everywhere equally revealed, any more than I believe it of myself. There are things I do that show my character far more fully than certain other things-and God has made me in his image. I see him in the sparrow and the mustard-seed; I see him in the lilies of the field; but I see more of him, far more of him, in the inspired word of the New Testament. And the fine thing to remember is just this, that the New Testament is not a hopeless book. Hope surges in it. Its note is that of victory. There steals on the ear in it the distant triumph song. It closes with the Book of Revelation, where the Lamb is upon the throne. And if this be the expression of God's being, far more fully than anything in nature, how sure we may be he is the God of Hope .- Dr. G. H. Morrison.

Meeting Tides.

Ira A. Paternoster.

I have been looking to-day on an interesting sight. Standing on the jetty which links Granite Island to the mainland at Victor Harbor, one sees the meeting of two tides of the ocean. The island has divided the incoming tide, part rolling around on the north side, and part coming through be-tween the Bluff and the island. These tides wash together on the shore just under the jetty. Sometimes they come in with scarcely a noticeable ripple. To-night they are meeting with a tremendous splash.

They seem to preach to me. I do not know that I can interpret their message aright, but they are telling me in the first place of that meeting of the tides in the conscience of a young man or woman who is facing a crisis in life. The great ocean of life has been rolling in with an unbroken swell, when suddenly there has arisen a new sense of duty-a challenge to a life of sacrifice for Jesus Christ. For moment the mind is disturbed by conflicting opinions. On and on they rush, washing up at last on the shore of eternity the wasted life. The meeting currents had restless grown, finding no peace and spending themselves, helpless, reckless in a final maddening rush. How foolish is that one who refuses the call of Christ! Jesus brings peace and safety to the soul of every individual.

There is a second division in that sermon of the sea. It tells of two honest beloved disciples who have long since gone to glory where all conflicts cease, and all tides meet in the great God-source. A difference of opinion has arisen over some great doctrine of Scripture. In this instance it is the post-millennium and premillennium interpretation of the coming of Christ. They are equally spiritual minded. Neither can claim aught over the other for Piety. Yet on this mighty Granite Island of Scripture truth, their minds have divided. They journeyed on in love and goodwill toward each other, their oceans of thought drawing closer and closer, until almost simultaneously they met together on the shore of eternity, and now know even as also they are known. Never once did they allow the special theories advanced by either of these schools of thought to disturb the even purpose of their lives. No hard names were called, no bitterness crept unto their differences, for Christ was all and in all. J. W. McGarvey and I. B. Grubb knew only love, for the Spirit of the Lord was upon

Yet a third division seemed to rise. It finds illustration in that hymn we sometimes sing, "Lead kindly light, amid the encircling gloom," We are told a conflict circling gloom." We are told a conflict Was raging in the mind of Dr. Newman. Not the conflict between light and darkness, but light but light and what to him seemed fuller light. This is a critical point with many a person, and frequently divides the ocean of their thought. How will those tides meet again, and where? In some instances it has meant the upsetting of all life's plans.

The Damascus experience of Saul of Tarsus surely comes under this head. A fuller light has broken upon his conscientious soul, and though it called for the sacrifice of all social standing, he could but follow the gleam. Had he rejected, the meeting tides of to-night, boisterous, cruel, frantic, seem to indicate what must have been his fate. Instead, he yielded and learned to say, "All that was gain I count as nought, for I have the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord."

And so in conclusion the meeting tides remind me again that the only peace of the ocean of life is the peace of a mind stayed on Christ. As he spake peace and the wind and the waves ceased, so he has spoken peace to my soul. And though oceans of doubt break about us, they can mean for us no harm, for Christ Jesus is the answer to all our problems, and we win in him.

"On the far reef the breakers recoil in shattered

But still the sea behind them urges its forces home. Its song of triumph surges o'er all the thunderous din.

The waves may break in failure, but the tide is sure to win.

"The reef is strong and cruel; upon its jagged wall

One wave-a score, a hundred-broken and beaten fall;

Yet in defeat they conquer, the sea comes crowding in, The wave may break in failure, but the tide is sure to win.

"Oh, mighty sea, thy message, in clanging spray

Within God's plan of progress; it matters not at last,

How wide the shores of evil, how strong the reef of sin.

The wave may break in failure, but the tide is sure to win."

Beautiful Old Age.

The weight of years does not necessarily chill the heart or sour the disposition. There are many furrowed faces which are beautiful, because wreathed in smiles; they are like a wrinkled sea, with a track of sunset light shimmering across it. There are thin and age-worn hands which have clasped our own as warmly as the hands of vigorous youth. There are aged hearts which have yearned over us with a tenderness which lusty manhood never knew. Old age can be marvellously endearing. What pathos there may be in a trembling voice! What eloquence may dwell in a furrowed brow where the ploughshare of suffering has been at work. How naturally may the "hoary head" become a "crown of glory."

Nor spring nor summer beauty hath such As I have seen in an autumnal face.

How venerable is the heart which has borne the battle and the stress of threequarters of a century. Can anything on earth be conceived more lovely than a parent whom old age has beautified by fine living? Surely the loveliest vision we have ever looked upon is the vision of a tender and ministrant mother, consecrated by age—her hair whitening with the blossoms of the tree of life, her face a benediction, her voice divinest music, her smile a glint of heaven. There is no hope for the man who does not feel nobly proud and strangely pure when he enters the house of God with such a mother leaning on his arm. motherless angel must envy such a man and long for such a ministry and service as that which supports and guides those faltering steps. Let a son so blest cherish such a mother as a sacred trust. Let him, if he have the means, clothe her venerable grace in silk of lavender, or dove, or silvery grey. Let spotless frills fall over her withered hands, and lovely lace enwrap her shoulders, such as beseems her heavenly beauty. was when such a one, after an embrace at parting, left one of her white hairs upon our shoulder, that we wrote-

Only a thread of silver,
From the locks which once were gold;
Only a thread of silver,
As a sign of growing old;
Only a thread of silver, From the brow so broad and fair; But there's dawn as well as twilight, In that thread of silver hair.

Carlyle's tender love for his mother atones for much of his ill-humor; Pope's affectionate care of his aged mother makes us forget his cynicism; and John Ruskin grows more lovely in our thought as we read, as written by himself, his mother's epitaph, who fell asleep at ninety:-"Here beside my father's body, I have laid my mother's; nor was dearer earth ever returned to earth, nor purer life recorded in heaven."-Selected.

> When all is done and said, In the end thus shall you find; He most of all doth bathe in bliss That hath a quiet mind. And, clear from worldly cares, To deem can be content The sweetest time in all his life In thinking to be spent.

-Thomas Vaux (1525).

Religious Notes and

The Faith of a Modernist.

Dr. Shailer Mathews, of Chicago, has drawn up a short series of affirmations representing the Modernist view of things. Summarised, they run— I believe in God, revealed in Jesus Christ and in history as Love.

I believe in Jesus Christ who revealed God as Saviour.

I believe in the Holy Spirit, the God of love experienced in human life.

believe in the Bible, historically interpreted. believe in prayer, in forgiveness, in the practicability of the teachings of Jesus, in social life, in the continuance of individual personality after death, in the church, and the ultimate triumph of justice and love.

The foregoing is from the London "Christian World." It sounds very nice, but we may note World." It sounds very nice, but we may note its omissions. This Modernist's "faith" evidently does not extend to a belief in the divinity of the Lord Jesus or the efficacy of his atoning death. The attitude is not modern though the calling of it "faith" rather than disbelief may be.

Ur of the Chaldees.

The excavators in Mesopotamia (says the London "Christian") are still bringing forth from the city of Abraham treasure which enables us more correctly to appreciate life in Ur of the Chaldees in ancient days. The joint expedition of the British Museum and the Museum of the University of Pennsylvania last week reported discoveries of great importance, which seem to prepare us for an ever-enlarging estimate of the developments of art and industry in and around Ur, in days long antecedent to those in which the Father of the Faithful entered upon his western pilgrimage. Last year the excavators laid bare the Ziggurat of Ur, the huge tower of the Moon the Ziggurat of Ur, the huge tower of the Moon than the Ziggurat of Ur, the New Town that The Land Town the Moon than the Land Town the Moon than the Land Town god, set up about 2,300 B.C.; now they report the discovery, carved in relief upon a limestone slab, of the portrait of Ur-Engur, the royal builder, with his own record of his building activities and in part much hievements. Broken as it is, and in part much damaged, the stela ranks among the finest known works of Sumerian art. The times of Nebuchadnezzar, in the sixth century, B.C., seem all too recent to command enthusiasm when compared with those of monarchs named in inscriptions recently found. In one scene of the stela, the Moon-god Nannar is seen seated upon his throne, and receiving the worship of the king, to whom he commits the work of building a shrine, by holding in his hand the measuring line and rod of the architect. Other details, eloquent of the practices of nations from whom Israel of old med lessons in idolatry, are plainly indicated, and one seems to be in very clear relations with the time when, with a deep earnestness, there came to the chosen people words of caution by the mouth of Moses against worshipping sun, moon, or stars, and serving divinities such as ruled among neighboring nationalities. From all such discoveries one fact stands out; and that is, that a whole heaven of difference separated the religion of Israel from the abominations of surrounding peoples.

The Rev. T. E. Ruth has accepted the invitation to the pulpit of Pitt-st. Congregational Church, Sydney. We take the following from "Pitt-st. Church News," dated June 7, 1925:—

"PULPIT STATEMENTS TELL THE STORY."

Sunday, April 5-

"I am not in a position to accept or decline the vitation. . . . There is no denominational difinvitation. . . There is no denominational dif-ficulty in the way of acceptance. For many years have been weary of distinctions without a difference. If I become minister of this church, I shall be free, as Congregational ministers all over the world are free, to baptise believers on confession of faith."

Sunday, May 3-

"My reply to the invitation to become the minister of this church has been decided for me. . I am convinced by the providential happenings associated with my relations to the church that it is God's will that I should accept what I can only regard as a divine call."

Sunday, May 10-

"My acceptance of the ministry commits the whole church to a great forward movement, which will demand the consecration of every ounce of energy and the investment of all our influence."

The service sheet of Pitt-st. church for June 7 contains these words: "Sermon: 'Not to Baptise, but to Preach.'" The preacher was the minister, Rev. T. E. Ruth. A Melbourne man writes as follows:-

"I went to hear Rev. Ruth. He said, I was Anglican church, bantised, was "I went to near recy, the said, I was converted in an Anglican church, baptised in a Baptist minister who is a converted in an Anglican church, baptised in a Baptist church by a Baptist minister who is now an Anglican, and I am now a Congregation an Anglican, and I am now a Congregation of speech, and tied down to church ritual or to dogmas." minister because an activation of the down to church ritual or to dogmas, am not tied down to church ritual or to dogmas, am not tied down to words are a correct report.

Broadcasting the Gospel.

Thos. Hagger.

The command to preach the gospel to every creature has never been revoked, and so it is the duty and privilege of the present-day disciple to tell the story to all possible people.

The method to be employed in telling the story was not given by the Christ when he gave the command to preach, nor at any time since. The disciple of to-day, then, may use his sanctified commonsense in the matter of method.

The apostles did not establish Sunday Schools, but using our commonsense for the Master, we have rightly decided that this is a fine method to adopt in carrying out his last command. apostles had no printing press, but we, to-day, use the press as a means of disseminating the gospel, and we are right in so doing.

Some wonderful discoveries have been made in recent days, and the writer is of the opinion that we should use any of these for the still further and more rapid spread of the glad tidings. The only arguments that can be used against this are similar to the arguments that have been used against the Sunday School, and so we should be careful not to oppose, as such may be but the prejudice and conservatism of our natures being allowed to block the progress of the work of

In his address at the Federal Conference in Sydney last October, the writer urged that we should use the motor car and the aeroplane for the rapid transit of the messenger; that we should use the wireless to broadcast the gospel. On returning to Perth he at once got into touch with the Westralian Farmers Ltd., who have the only broadcasting station in Perth, and arrangements were made to broadcast the Sunday evening service from the Lake-st, chapel at regular intervals.

Thus the Perth church became the pioneer among Churches of Christ in this land in broadcasting the regular Sunday evening service, although one of the services conducted by Bro. J. Kellems in the Exhibition Building in Adelaide had been previously broadcasted. It is estimated by the broadcasting department of the Westerlian Fernance casting department of the Westralian Farmers that from four to six thousand people "listen in" every Sunday evening. What an opportunity this presents then, to present the gospel to a great

On every occasion when we have been broadcasted, we have had most appreciative messages from isolated members, people in our public institutions, people confined to their own homes, and people at a distance. On one occasion there were three confessions at the close of a broadcasted service, and people listening-in heard, not only the question put by the preacher, but the response which the converts made. One man wrote after one service to say that when it was announced that the service on that particular night was being relayed from the Lake-st. Church of Christ he was disappointed (I suppose he had some of the strange prejudice which some folks who do not come into contact with us have), but he said his disappointment gave way to pleasure as the service proceeded. We were written to about another more than the service proceed. service proceeded. We were written to about another man who had not been to any kind of a church service for years, who was induced by a member in the country to listen-in with him, and as the service proceeded the non-churchgoer was in tears, and next morning said that he could not sleep through the night, and that the sleeplessness was doubtless caused by what he had heard when over 1,000 miles from Perth, where no church service of any lend service of any kind is held, telling us that everything was heard there most clearly. Churches heard of some who had not heard of the Churches of Christ heart of Christ before, and of others who had not come

Somebody will doubtless ask, "But will not broadcasted. Somebody will doubtless ask, "But will not broadcasting tend to keep people away from the Sunday evening services?" Our experience, so far, is that on broadcasting wights we have better far, is that on broadcasting nights we have better congregations than on other nights. And surely no real discovery congregations than on other nights. And sites no real disciple of Christ would willingly seat away to "listen-in," and thus by his vacant hinder the

The writer is of the opinion that broadcasting a splendid mother hinder the work. is a splendid method of getting the gospel before a large number of a large number of people who would not easily be reached in any other people who would make it a be reached in any other way, but to make it a success no member should be absent from service which is being broadcasted if it is at all possible to be present.

Paul Back in Jerusalem.

Acts 21: 1=36. Text, Verse 36.

"Behold I go bound in the Spirit unto Jeruslem, not knowing the things that shall befall me In this spirit Paul made what proved to the his final journey to Jerusalem; and if those things should prove to be evil, he could still say, things should provide the county and ready not only to be bound, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus." the words reveal a courage of surpassing strength, The words reveal a courage of sarpassing strength, and the perfect confidence of the man that he was in the path of duty. The sequel shows how well-founded were his anticipations, and how much he needed the courage born of a glorious faith. The issue was momentous to Paul, and not less the lewish people. The three closing words of the chosen text, "Away with him," express the final attitude of the nation, not only to Paul, the herald of the gospel, but also to Jesus, whom he preached as their Messiah. "Away with him!" And with this cry they headed more directly for national destruction. Rejecting the true light, they would follow the false, only to find they were but will-o'-the-wisps.

The words, followed by the arrest of Paul, closed his missionary labors as a free man, but opened for him in God's overruling providence auother ministry as "the prisoner of the Lord." This brought the gospel, as we shall see, to an entirely new set of people, men of influence, and of official position, and created the conditions which gave to the church for all time the precious heritage of the epistles of the captivity. Thus does God cause the wrath of men to praise him, and the cnemies of his truth to be the means for its propagation. Passing by the incidents of the journey, we will note how matters turned out, and seek to learn a few lessons.

I. Welcomed at Jerusalem (17-19).

That Paul looked forward to this hour with deep anxiety is clear from Romans 15: 25-33, "Strive together with me in your prayers." And for what? "That I may be delivered from those who do not believe," he wrote, and that the gifts be brought, the ferrile of Continued danial might he brought, the fruit of Gentile self-denial, might be acceptable to the Jewish church, remove all who knew well of this gift, tells us nothing of its presentation, nor of its reception. He notes only that "it was not in the control of the only that "the brethren welcomed us gladly." After the private welcome they went in "unto James, and all the elders were present," to whom Paul told the rospel James, and all the elders were present, to whom all told the story of the triumph of the gospel among the Gentiles. "And they, when they heard it, glorified God; and they said unto him"—What did they say? I confess to some disappointment in what they said. Perhaps they said other ment in what they said. Perhaps they said other things—I hope they did—of appreciation of Gentile liberalism the liberality, of approbation of Paul's wonderful missions. But Luke has only told us of their suspicions and fears, perhaps because out of this grew the subsequent history he relates.

II. Slandered by his enemies (20-26). Paul's arrival was the signal for the circulation of slanders and suspicions. The old Pharisaical Party from whose ranks he had deserted, and the leading party in the state of the state o Judaising party in the early church, would be the source of these rumors. While the sane consera hopeless anti element which viewed Paul as a the churches. They reported that Paul had in the churches. h the churches. They reported that Paul had broken the compact agreed upon at the conference at Jerusalem, and taught the Jews who lived and not to circumciae their children. (Evidently had and not to circumcise their children. (Evidently neither these Jewish Christians nor Paul had circumcised their children.) The room of the Jews at the same time.) The report was without foundation, and Paul agreed to dispel the rumor by associating himself with four men who had made a Nazarite vow. Paul's action may be easily misunderstood. But he was quite consistent in doing this. For himself he was ever ready to "become a Jew" to win the Jews. He did not teach the Jews to break away from national semi-religious rites, nor to neglect cir-cumcision. Nay, he himself had Timothy obey the Jewish rite. What he would never admit, was that it had aught to do with any man's salvation, nor would he for a moment permit them to be fastened on the Gentiles. This lesson shows that this was also the view of the leaders of the church in Jerusalem. Justification was by faith in Christ without any intermediary ritual of temple, law, or synagogue (see Galatians 3: We see how wide was the liberty in nonessentials, and how great diversity in minor matters was present among those who held to the "one Lord, one faith, one baptism." Unity in faith may exist without uniformity in non-essentials, then and now. Paul's plan to conciliate his Jewish brethren was probably quite successful, but danger arose from the side of the non-Christian Jews, especially those who were from Asia, and his action brought it to a head.

III. Mobbed by the Jews (27-29).

Trouble came from the Jews from Asia, who were up at the festival. In Ephesus and elsewhere they had opposed him. They recognised him in the temple, and they had also seen Trophimus with him in the street. What could he—an energy of the recognist the law and the temple, he enemy of the people, the law, and the temple—be doing there save to desecrate it! So they shouted for help, crying, "This is the man," etc. "Their charges against him were partly lies, partly contains a drawn from misnarchanging of his contains." clusions drawn from misapprehension of his position, partly exaggeration, and partly hasty assumptions." And when you get such a mixture you will never be short of a charge against a man. The remark of Dr. Maclaren is true, "The charges are a complete object lesson in the baser arts of religious (!) partisans; and they have arts of religious (!) partisans; and they have been but too faithfully reproduced in all ages." It is hard to be scrupulously fair in stating your opponent's position, when the immediate desire is for a dialectic victory. In no atmosphere is it harder to hold as our single aim the glory of God and the victory of truth. The narrow par-God and the victory of truth. The narrow partisan cry appealed to the mob, and acted as a spark to powder. Their ferocity was masked as zeal for the law and the temple. That Jerusalem did not murder the apostle, as it had the Lord himself, was due to no lack of intention, but to the intervention of the protecting power of pagan Rome. One can hardly fail to see here the hand of God, and to hear again the voice of rejected love: "O Jerusalem that killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee; how often would I . . . but ye would not.'

IV. Rescued by the Romans (30=33).

The course of history, in the individual, as in the national life, is often altered by what people mistakenly have thought. Paul's whole future was altered by this assault engineered by bigots, but executed by mistaken men and women. rescue from the mob by the Roman captain is the first in a long series of related actions which finally brought Paul before the court in the city of Rome. The Jewish would-be murderers and the Roman rescuers were each factors in carrying out God's plan, yet each acted the part his heart prompted, and for that they bear responsibility. Yet God over-ruled all to work out his own de-Rome appears as the unconscious protector of the infant church from her who ought to have mothered her own spiritual offspring, not only here but in other places in Acts. The mob only here but in other places in Acts. The mob when pressed for a charge was voluble, but incoherent, and exactly like the Greek mob in Ephesus. All the captain could gather was, "Away with him." so he ordered him to be taken for safety into the barracks. It was on the head of the stairs that a question put by Paul, in Greek, to him revealed his error in supposing he had here some formula Environmental Leader of a cuthad here some famous Egyptian leader of a cutthroat band. In reply to his question Paul proudly claimed to be a Jew, but a citizen of Tarsus—"a citizen of no mean city." Permission to speak to the mob below was readily granted, for which favor we have great cause for thank-fulness. That address will form our next study; but, stånding on that stairway, let us learn some triths for our encouragement. The wrath of truths for our encouragement. The wrath of these men who desired to silence Paul only gave him another opportunity to witness for Jesus in the world's religious centre. Paul used it as a the world's religious centre. Faut used it as a God-given chance. Paul must also witness in the imperial city, the political centre, and Jewish bigots, misled religionists, and Roman officials help to bring it to pass, seeing nothing of God's design.

Thus do the dramatic scenes of this chapter reveal the divine providence, guiding Paul to the consummation of his life's work at Rome, and making possible the production of that literature which has so blessed the world. It was this fixed faith that God's hand was in all the affairs of his life that enabled Paul to be in such perfect peace amid the storm. "If God is our rock and our high tower, we shall not be moved."

The Wealth of the World.

The senselessness of war (says a writer in the "Church News"), even from a material point of view, may be realised from some striking figures worked out by American bankers.

Just before the war the total wealth of twenty nations engaged in it was estimated to be £126,000,000,000, but to-day it is only £123,000,000,000. Wealth is, of course, not gold, but the total of all things having a marketable value, and the enormous drop of £2,200,000,000 means a fall of this sum in the value of beautiful and useful things in the world to-day.

Some nations, however, have more wealth than they had in 1914, and among these are Britain and the United States. The pre-war wealth of the British Empire was about £28,000,000,000, and today it is £20,800,000,000. The United States had in 1914 £40,000,000,000, and now she has £46,000,000,000. France had £12,000,000,000, and to-day her wealth is about the same, but Germany has fallen from £16,000,000,000 in 1914 to £11,000,000,000 in 1924.

When I Awake (Ps. 17: 15).

I shall be well content when I awake From the dream-sleep of Life, and look away, To see the golden sunlit morning break Of the eternal day.

When from the everlasting hills shall rise All the awakening voices of the spheres, Sweet with the ages' unsung harmonies, Tuned for undying years.

Never to raise vain hands in mute appeal To dim. unanswering skies, or halt unmanned Beside the rugged way, and seek to feel, Childlike, the guiding hand.

There shall lack nothing; for the seas shall yield Their spoil again, and earth unbar her doors, And all the hidden ways shall be revealed, And all the secret stores.

Then from the veil of earth that bound me fast, I shall be free, transfigured, glorified! For in his likeness I shall rise at last And shall be satisfied!

The Widow's Mite.

The careless and ofttimes flippant use of Scriptural expressions becomes a habit with some peo-ple. Sometimes the habit is wholly thoughtless; but the hypocrite ever seeks to hide his hypocrisy under the garb of piety, and men whose only god is gold, and whose business it is to rob the widow is gold, and whose business it is to rob the widow and the fatherless, frequently have the Bible at their tongue's end.

In a certain town the Christian people were en-deavoring to build a new church edifice to replace one which age had long since made truly unfit for worship.

There was one very wealthy man in the place, but he had never been known to do a really generous act in his life. At least, such was the report. He loved money better than most men loved themselves. The pastor well knew that, did he feel so disposed, old Squire Buckridge could head the subscription list for the round head. could head the subscription-list for the new church with a generous sum. It seemed to the good man, too, as though it was right for him to approach the old gentleman first, though, truth to tell, his faith was not what it should have been. We are very apt to let our foreknowledge of people and circumstances get in the way of our faith in this world.

Of course the minister was primed to answer the usual objections of "the old church having been good enough to worship the Lord in for fifty years," and such like moth-eaten excuses for continuous to all Cold to moth his people in a crust with the cold in a crust his people in a crust was the cold to moth his people in a crust was the cold to moth his people in a crust was the cold to moth his people in a crust was the cold to moth his people in a crust was the cold to meet his people in a crust was the cold to meet his people in a crust was the cold to meet his people in a crust was the cold to meet his people in a crust was the cold to meet his people in a crust was the cold to meet his people in a crust was the cold to meet his people in a crust was the cold to meet his people in a crust was the cold to meet his people in a crust was the cold to meet his people in a crust was the cold to meet his people in a crust was the cold to meet his people in a crust was the cold to meet his people in a crust was the tinuing to ask God to meet his people in a structure in which the people themselves would have been ashamed to house their cattle. It is really odd how humble folks are, and how little they feel given to display, when the need of a new church edifice is mentioned.

But the pastor patiently got over that stage of the discussion and finally managed to make the squire see how really beneficial to the town in general, and to his property interests in particular, general, and to his property interests in particular, a new church would be.

"Well, elder," said the old gentleman, "I expec' if you really air goin' to build a new meetin'-house, I shall have to do somethin' for you. Money's very tight now, an' sometimes I don't know which way to turn for ready money, there's so many calls for it—I don't, for a fac'. But every little helps, I s'pose; th' Lord commended the widder's mite, ye know, an' I'll certainly do as well as the widder did; you can count on my mite, elder," and he chuckled softly.

The poor pastor felt, while the old man was speaking, as though all his work had gone for naught. Suddenly he raised his head and stared sharply into the squire's face.

"Do you mean what you say, brother?" he asked gravely. "Eh?"

"Do you mean that you will subscribe for this worthy object as generously as the widow gave to the Lord's treasury?

heavily on the squire's arm, still with his eyes fixed upon the other's face. "We do not ask nor expect such generosity, Bro. Buckridge," he said sternly. "Not for our church, at least, though I would be glad to know that you considered your riches held only in trust for the Lord."

"Wha—what d' you mean, elder?" the old gentleman gasped weakly.

"The widow, squire, gave all the living she had, and was commended for it. The rich men, who there in real of their abundance only thought threw in gold of their abundance, only thought they were being generous."

The pastor rose and went away without further comment. But the very next day the squire was round and set down his name on the subscriptionlist for far more than the good man had dared hope. Nor was it the last generous thing the old man did. The minister's pointed words had opened the squire's eyes to his own condition.—Selected.

The Bread of Life.

Of all the emblems employed by our Lord to show his power to meet our human needs, this one is the most realistic. The word "bread" was one is the most realistic. The word bread was used by him in the general sense, as meaning food. We speak of men earning their daily bread and pray: "Give us this day our daily bread"—using the term "bread" in the sense of food. Food represents our primary physical need. We may do without other things, but to sustain life we must have food. When Jesus called himself "the bread of life," he used the strongest figure at his command to emphasise that we must have him in order to have life in the highest and

At the time when Christ made this claim, bread was much in the minds of the people. It was the day following the feeding of the multitude in that wondrous way. When the people came seeking him, Jesus immediately saw their motive, and warned them to "Labor not for the meat which perisheth, but for the meat which endureth unto everlasting life." Jesus never overlooked the everlasting life." Jesus never overlooked the needs of the body. He came eating and drinking, and himself provided men with food and drink. He makes it clear, however, that these are not his essential and distinctive gifts. We are to hunger and thirst for the heavenly food which is himself: "I am the bread of life: he that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst."

In this statement Jesus made two claims: he is

THE LIVING BREAD FROM HEAVEN.

Several times throughout this discourse, Jesus spoke of himself as having "come down from heaven." The Jews thought they could explain everything about him because they knew his human ancestry. Many to-day argue that because Jesus was human, therefore he cannot be divine. Such reasoning ignores the power of God, and knows little of his ways of working. The very miracles that Charles little of his ways of working. The very miracles that Christ worked testify to a power that knew no human limitations. His sinlessness, the majesty of his teaching, the power of his kingdom—these all demand a divine origin. Paul's explanation that "God was in Christ" is the only one that meets the case. "In him we have God, and in him we touch the actual source of all life. In him we have the one thing within our reach which is not earth—grown, the one uncorreach which is not earth-grown, the one uncorrupted source of life to which we can turn from the inadequacy, impurity, and emptiness of a sinsick world."

THE BREAD WHICH GIVES LIFE.

Christ claimed not only that he had eternal Christ claimed not only that he had eternal life in himself, but that he is the source of eternal life to others: "He that cometh to me shall never houger, and he that the cometh to me shall never life to others: "He that cometh to me shall never thirst," "If any man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever." Later in the discourse, Jesus explained how he was able to give this eternal life flesh, which I will give for the life of the world." He bread which I will give is my Just as flesh can only become our food through the state of the world." Just as flesh can only become our food through his death, so Jesus could only become our life through his death. He had only become teath so Jesus could only become our life through his death. He became poor that we might become died that we might be free. He him, make might live. Our part is to receive the strength of our soul, and he will become to us the gift of everlasting life.

P.B.P. and Missions.

The Phi Beta Pi club connected with the Lygonst. church, Vic., has a very live interest in the work of Foreign Missions. Two of its members carry on a successful lolly trade among the club's members and friends during the week; and all the profit made is given to funds not immediately connected with Lygon-st. During the last twelve months, they have distributed the profits as follows: To Save the Children Fund, £2; to Foreign lows: 10 Save the Children Fund, £2; to Foreign Missions, £1; to Collingwood Mission Work, 12/-; to help buy clothes for a poor family, 10/-; and 6/- to the Children's Home at Cheltenham. In addition to the above, £1 goes each quarter to the Leper Fund. All the club help by purchasing their sweets at the club instead of elsewhere. After club each night, every one has to respond to the call, "Buy a Foreign Mission snowball!" They also collect id. per week from most of the girls, and on Foreign Mission Sunday this year they will be able to hand over £4 from the club. Last year the club held a gift night, and sent a parcel of goods with the Christmas boxes forwarded to our missionaries.

At the last executive meeting of the above union, over which Mr. L. Walters presided, re-ports were received from eight young people's and two Intermediate Societies. Five pounds were two Intermediate Societies. Five pounds were donated to Home Mission funds to help in the purchase of a new typewriter for the office, and a committee of six was appointed to meet the Bible School Committee re the formation of a "Young People's Department."

On June 15, over 200 Endeavorers met at Hindmarsh for the annual get-together social. Bro. B. W. Manning had charge of the programme, and Bro. Wiltshire gave a short helpful talk. During the evening musical, elocutionary and other items were enjoyed, and a very happy time of fellowship resulted.

On the following day some members of the C.E. Union motored to Strathalbyn. On their arrival they were surprised to find that a number of Milang Endeavorers had also come to Strathalbyn. Miss Spurr took charge of the meeting, and outlined the plans of the union for the year, albyn. Miss D. Watkins rendered a solo, and Mr. F. Pocock gave a very helpful address. Australian Band of Hope Union.

During the past three years, a big series of seaside, playground, and other special temperance meetings for young people have been conducted by Mr. W. H. Rose, of the Australian Band of by Mr. W. H Hope Union.

At these meetings up-to-date Band of Hope methods have been used with good results. Rubber stamps, a beer bottle, peanuts, blotters, charts, diagrams, chemical experiments, and other features, have helped to win the interest and attention of the youthful audiences.

Five States have been visited in connection with this campaign. In all, some 3,500 temperance pledges have been signed. In many cases the young people who sign become members of Bands of Hope, or other temperance societies.

In all cases, the birthdays of the young people are recorded, and a nice card sent to them each year, as a reminder of their promise and as a greeting. These cards bring many responses from various parts of the Commonwealth, which show that good has been done. Here is one response, "I received your greeting on my birthday, and was pleased. Dad and mother were pleased too. Father has not had any drink for three years, so now we have temperance parents.

Mr. W. H. Rose, 430 Bourke-st., Melbourne, will be glad to forward, to those interested, par-ticulars of the means used in reaching and in-fluencing the young people in the cause of total abstinence.

"The Shattered Globe."

WORD FROM VICTORIAN FOREIGN MISSION TREASURER.

Quite recently I heard Mr. F. W. Boreham, the now famous Baptist minister and author, of Armadale, Vic., in a wonderful word-picture address relate in beautiful language a parable concerning the Carpenter of Nazareth engaged in his great task of mending "The Shattered Globe," The picture was given of the Carpenter seated in a beautiful roadway under a magnificent spreading tree. Before him passed a great procession of men and women of all nations under heaven. black and white, yellow and brown, from every clime, and of every tribe and nation. He was trying to place all of these people in their various positions in his patchwork in the shattered globe. In order to accomplish his purpose, and to aid him in his work, preachers of the gospel, missionaries, missionary societies, Bible societies, and all who told the story of the cross, all had a share as his helpers. One of the greatest helpers had been the British and Foreign Bible Society, which since its establishment in 1804 had issued three hundred and forty-five million copies of the Scriptures in more than five hundred and seventy-two tures in more than five hundred and seventy-two distinct languages of various peoples of the earth. So it came to pass that the Carpenter of Nazareth was able to do his work. As Mr. Boreham finely said, "Slowly yet surely Christ is picking up the broken pieces of his world and fastening them together. I wonder if he will let us hold his tools or hand him his nails or carry his basket, or in any other way help him to complete that or in any other way help him to complete that lovely world, the world of all our dreams, the world of Christ that is to be.'

Our Churches of Christ in the Commonwealth of Australia will help the Carpenter of Nazareth in his wonderful work by continually supporting our faithful missionaries and representatives in India, China and the islands of the sea, so that they might teil on our behalf the story of the cross, and of the Saviour of the world. The power of Christ to heal, to help and to save is as mighty as ever.

"Christ possesses a sovereign transcendence of time and space. He is not a dead fact stranded on the shore of the oblivious years, but One who is alive for evermore.

Ours is a wonderful privilege to have a part in the great achievement of restoring "The Shattered Globe."-Robert Lyall.

A Sunday Afternoon at the Kwenmingrd. Church of Christ, April 12, 1925.

I crowded, rather noisy gathering presented itself to our view as we entered the compounds last Sunday afternoon: the passageways were full of laughing, talking and moving onlookers. impossible to get them to sit down in the usual quiet way to listen to the service. It was a special day—a united baptismal service was being held, and as the baptistery is out in the court-yard; visitors and friends remained there to see how everything would go.

The list that was presented to us showed that nineteen persons intended taking this great step that afternoon. It transpired that three of them could not attend, so the actual number immersed was sixteen. These came from the three of the four churches in Shanghai, but mostly from two of them. Our Kwemning-rd, church had only three of this number.

While the service was going on inside, and the animated scene outside, coolies, with buckets suspended from a pole carried across their shoulders, were emptying into the baptistery some hot water, which could not be done until the last moment. You must remember that hot water is sold in shops throughout China, just like other commodities; and that only when the time was ripe for the addition of the hot water was it delivered.

Inside the building the evangelist, Mr. Ning Sae-bau, was carefully explaining the meaning of baptism to those gathered about him. As I listened, I felt that his explanation would not have shamed our most earnest exponent at home.

The meeting broke into the strains of "Happy Day," as the old elder took his stand in the water and prepared to receive the new converts. as each man and woman came out of the water, they sang as a chorus, "Jesus Paid It All."

In the course of time, the baptisms finished, the audience settled down for the regular afternoon service, and while Mr. Hu Sing-kwei, the elder in charge, went off to change his garments, evangelist Ning carried on the first part of the ser-The new members were placed near the platform for their recognition, which is done by the audience standing up to give them a welcome.

The communion service, usually taking place in the very middle of the afternoon, is to-day delayed until after the address, and at four o'clock Mr. Hu took his seat at the table, and concluded a very happy and important afternoon by handing out the emblems in memory of our common Lord.

That Sunday afternoon will be memorable for another reason as well, because negotiations for nion movement of the four churches in Shanghai, extending over a considerable period, were brought to a happy conclusion by the formation of a union committee, which will enable representatives of each of these churches to confer together and take common action in regard to evangelistic work, and any other matters calling for much action. This is a great step in advance in means that the gensue work. Bro. Lionel Johnston leaves Melbourne this week for his new field of labor. His address will be 69 Goulburn-st., Hobart, Tasmania.

Victorian brethren are informed that the Conference and Home Mission Office is now situated at McEwan House, 4th Floor, 343-349 Little Collins-st., Melbourne.

Bro. W. G. Alcorn, preacher of the Fulton church, Mo., U.S.A., is visiting Australia after an absence of twenty years. We regret to note the passing away of his father, an esteemed pioneer that are Open plant, churches of our Queensland churches.

Our readers are reminded of the annual meeting of the Bible Union of Victoria to be held in Collins-st. Congregational Church building, Melbourne, on Monday evening next, at 8 o'clock. See advertisement in this issue.

Hawthorn, Vic., received two new members on Sunday, by faith and baptism. Bro. T. H. Sembler's subject in the morning was "The Sambler's subject in the morning was "The Birth of a Nation," and at night "Pilgrims on the Way to the Promised Land." Very good

At Paddington, N.S.W., on June 28, a large and expectant crowd of people attended the opening service of the Baker-Clay mission. Bro. Clay admirably led the singing, while Bro. Baker pre-tented a powerful gospel message. Great hopes Great hopes are entertained of a very successful mission.

Bro. J. McClelland, secretary of the new church at Ormond, Vic., reports twenty new subscribers to "The Australian Christian." This worthy example may be commended to all our secretaries, especially where missions are being held. "Our durch paper in every church home" is a good slogan. It will pay preachers and officers to urge that members become subscribers and regular readers.

Meetings at Blackburn, Vic., on June 28 were very good. In the morning Sister Porter and her two sons, from Cheltenham, were received dress to the adults. In the evening Bro. Shain enducted a memorial service to the late Bro. John Sanders. The meeting was the best for a long time. A girls' mission circle has been formed. This promises to be helpful.

Interest is still increasing in the Hinrichsen-Pratt tent mission at Northcote, Vic. On Saturday afternoon, about thirty men came to assist in the enlarging of the tent. The seating capacity was doubled. On Sunday morning twelve were welcomed into followship. In the evening, in welcomed into fellowship. In the evening, in the interest of the enlarged tent, there were scores who had to stand. There were five confessions making a total of. There were five An offermaking a total of twenty-four to date. An offering for the unemployed amounted to £7/14/-.

With more favorable weather conditions the bission meetings at Surrey Hills, Vic., have been long girl contended. A married man and a long girl contended. The ung girl confessed Christ since last report. The thurch was encouraged at reaching the century bark at the Lord's table. 150 ladies and girls study to Bro. Meetings at Mile End, S.A., have been very encouraging of late. On June 21 eight were re-ceived by faith and baptism, and at the close of the morning service two re-consecrated. This service will long be remembered. June 28, one was received by baptism and one by letter. Evening services are packed to the doors. The church expects to complete and open the new building in about six weeks. Preparations are well in hand for the Adelaide Town Hall meetings for Show Week prior to Conference gatherings.

At the week-end about £4,000 was still needed to reach the sum of £16,000 aimed at by the committee of the appeal for the Melbourne City The last day of the campaign proved to be the best. Although a substantial sum of money has yet to be sent in, and the "Button Day" turns are far from complete, the secretary announced that, with about £2,500 more, the objective would be reached. A difficult task was set the mission to accomplish that object within 30 days, but subscribers rallied splendidly to the appeal. The mission counts on a period of more extensive social service as the result of the wide publicity given to its effort.

We announce with deep regret the passing of Sister Lawson, wife of Charles Lawson, of 27 Wattle Valley-rd., Canterbury, Vic. Mrs. Law-son had been ill for about two months, and on Monday morning at 4.30 she passed into the the better land, conscious to the last, with firm faith and trust in her Saviour. She was in the eighty-first year of her age. For very many years our sister was a faithful member of Swanston-st. church. She was much beloved by those who Her dear ones who mourn possess knew her. a happy memory and the Christians' bright hope. Our sincere sympathy goes out to Bro. Lawson and the bereaved family in their loss of a beloved wife and devoted mother.

Arrangements are being made to entertain men identified with our churches who are included in the U.S.A. Fleet shortly to visit Melouted in the U.S.A. Freet shortly to visit Mel-bourne. It is hoped to arrange for an outing at National Park, Upper Ferntree Gully, on Satur-day, July 25. The visitors will be conveyed thence per motor car, and it is hoped that many of our brethren will make the journey by rail, and unite in a basket picnic. It is requested that all brethren able to do so will volunteer the use of their cars for the occasion. Certain expenses will be involved in this undertaking, and it is thought that some who are unable to help in any other way may be able to make a donation to wards the cost. Money for this purpose should be sent to the Home Mission Office, McEwan House, 4th Floor, 343-349 Little Collins-st., Melb.

A representative gathering crowded Rosewood chapel recently to do honor to Bro. H. Bassard, President of our Queensland Conference. The eccasion was the third anniversary of Mr. Bassard's arrival in the circuit. Under the chairmanship of Mr. Albert Hinrichsen (President of the West Moreton Conference), an excellent musical and elocutionary programme was presented. The Challenge of Our Task.

Men love to be dared. There is special appeal in the hazardous undertaking. The thrill of ad-venture stirs the soul to its depths. Men fearlessly attempt the seemingly impossible. Human progress is ever along the pathway of difficulty and danger. The ship is not tested in the quiet waters of the harbor, but in the storm-lashed waves of the mighty deep. The rope does not prove itself, save as it bears the strain of heavy loads. So it is in the struggle of life the highest perfection is reached.

Jesus recognised all this. He never made the men. Adventuring for God and his kingdom, he He challenged men. Adventuring for Gou and his self-e, "Self set forth as the supreme experience of life, "Self set forth as the supreme experience of life, "Exall that thou hast and give to the poor." "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." "He that loveth father or mother more than me, is not worthy of me." "Let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me.

Jesus Christ and him crucified is the central theme of Christianity, and the secret of its power. Calvary is not only the symbol of sinless suffering, but also a challenge to the heroism of a mighty faith in the plan of God for the redemp-

Golgotha was on the hill-top, not in the valley. lesus climbed the heights to get there. And for every Christian, the place of self-denial and sacrifice is reached by the upward steps of willing imitation of our Lord—the response to his challenge.

The glory of the movement with which churches of Christ are identified is in its challenge. To be on the side of the minority; to embrace the cause which is unpopular; to attack the citadels of custom, of prejudice, of human authority, of ecclesiasticism-these are among the daring things of our faith.

A three-fold task is ours to-day.

I. To interpret an ideal.

Men who do not see visions and dream dreams accomplish but little. It is profitable to look at the things which are not seen. The ideal is usually the invisible, but not necessarily the un-

Religious movements have been efforts towards ideals-the striving to make them real. Luther came the vision of the unfettered Word, the supremacy of the Scriptures, and through that a church free from the corruptions of Romanism. To Calvin, a vision of the sovereignty of God, and a church all-conquering as it expressed the divine Fatherhood among men. To Wesley, the vision of the presence and power of the Holy Spirit in the life of the child of God, and a church mighty to the pulling down of strongholds, because a spiritual force in the community.

A matchless ideal is the inspiration of the movement with which we are to-day identified—the restoration of the church as established by its divine Founder. Archæologists, digging through the dirt of centuries, have unearthed hidden treasure, have exposed to view buried cities. So mighty men of God have cleared away the refuse of human tradition and speculation, and displayed in its wondrous perfection and glory the temple of divine indwelling, the church of our

"The power, whether of painter or poet, to describe rightly what he calls an ideal thing, depends upon its being to him not an ideal, but a real thing. No man ever did, or ever will work well, but either from actual sight or sight of faith."

The church is a divine institution. The prophetic promise of Jesus: "I will build my church," gives it a prominence belonging to no other or-gives it a prominence belonging to no other organisation. The fact that Christ loved the church, gave himself for it, sanctified it, that he might present it to himself a glorious church, makes it a separate and distinct institution, with a position and history wholly unique.

Our task is to make that church real. To interpret in terms of to-day, the church of 1900 years ago. To show to men that divine love saw the need, and divine wisdom made adequate provision for its spiritual requirements.

The progress of the church of God is to be made by going back—back beyond uninspired men, and institutions, and societies, and traditions and customs, back to the apostles and the church they built, according to the plan, and under the direction of the great Master Builder.

For this age the church is supreme in the purpose of Jesus. All the witnessing, and the working for him are to be done by the church. The New Testament, presents it to us as the ideal to be attained by those who are builded together as a habitation of God through the Spirit. Our task is to conform the organisation, the worship and the service of each congregation of Christians to this divinely revealed pattern in its essential particulars.

We have been faulty interpreters of this ideal.

Too frequently we have lost sight of it altogether. The objective of our task has been forgotten. The model of our neighbors has been more easily copied than the plan of God. But to interpret this New Testament ideal is a worth-while task.

II. To imitate an example.

Christianity is Christocentric. Christianity is Christocentric. Jesus is both author and finisher of the faith. He is greater than the doctrines has the than the doctrines he taught, the ordinances he established, or the programme his life embraced. "The prerogative of our Christian faith, and the secret of its strength, is that all which it has, and all which it offers, is laid up in a Person. It has not merely a deliverance, but a Deliverer; not a redemption only, but a Redeemer as well. The light is the life of men. How great the difference between submitting ourselves to a complex of rules, and casting ourselves upon a beating heart; between accepting a system, and cleaving to a between accepting a system, and cleaving to a person."

"I have given you an example," was a bolder declaration than "I have given you a precept." Men may controvert the teaching about Christ, but they cannot challenge the life of our Lord. In both his human and divine relations he was peerlessly perfect. There was no response to his imperial charge "GO" until lives had been won by the charm of the invitation "Follow me."

"Ye are manifestly declared to be the epistle."

"Ye are manifestly declared to be the epistle is an inspired, descriptive statement of Christ" is an inspired, descriptive statement of the intimate relationship existing between Christ and his disciples. History has been declared to be "his story." In the life of the child of God that should be so. Men reading a fresh translation of the "Life of Lives," in the life of Course one born again.

There is no better definition of the Christian life than Paul's statement, "For as many of you as have been baptised into Christ, have put on Christ." We have put him on, and we must continue do-We have put him on, and we must continue doing so, for a companion injunction is: "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ." "He was made partaker of flesh and blood," and through that has made it possible for us to be made "partakers of the divine nature." We are "predestined to be conformed to the image of God's Son."

Men know more about Christianity as they see it in us, than as it is revealed in Christ or re-it in us, than as it is revealed in Christ or re-corded in the Scriptures. Our task is to re-present Jesus. To reproduce in our lives, by the power of the Holy Spirit, the matchless life of God's dear Son. "Sometimes it seems to me," says dear Son. "Sometimes it seems to me," says Beecher, "that the very sanctuary of God has been filled with wood, hay and stubble, and the divine lineaments of Christ have been swept over and covered by the painting hands of man; and I am seized with an invincible ardor to draw from its hiding place, and reveal to and I am seized with an invalence aroor to draw forth from its hiding place, and reveal to men the glory of God as it shines in the face of Christ matters little to me what scheme the giory of God as Jesus. It matters little to me what school of Jesus. Jesus and falls, so only that Chair Jesus. It matters mule to me what school of theology rises and falls, so only that Christ may rise and appear in all his Father's glory, full orbed upon the darkness of the world. It matters little to me, what church comes forth stress orbed upon the databases of the sound. It materials that the sound the poor, the single so only the poor, the single so or what weak, so only the poor, the sinful, the or what weak, the lost among men, may have presented a Saviour acceptance of the church a Saviour acceptance of the church as a saviour acceptance of the church a to them in the church, a Saviour accessible, reato them in the the human understanding, and available in every hour of temptation, or of remorse or of want.

The need to-day is not fellowship with a sent.

ment, with a tradition, with an ideality, but with a real living personal being—with Christ,

"In having all things, and not thee, What have my labors got?

Let me enjoy but thee, what further crave

And having thee alone, what have I not? I wish not sea or land; nor would I be Possessed of heaven, heaven unpossessed of thee."

Imitation may be "the sincerest form of flattery." But it is indispensable to the real presentation of our Lord to men. It is much less difficult to preach Christ, than to practise him. We need more of Christ in the sanctuary. But certainly not less in the home, in the school, in the office. in the factory, in the business, in the legislature and in society. He has been too long separated from the things which men call secular, but which his presence would make sacred. "Back to Christ" must be more than a slogan of our movement. It must be the inspiration of our life.

III. To invest in an enterprise.

"The kingdom of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever." That prophecy awaits fulfilment. To the church has been entrusted the mission which prepares for that august day. There is no task so tremendous, no service so honorable.

is no task so tremendous, no service so honoraus no enterprise so glorious.

To establish world empires, to strengthen earthly kingdoms, men have served heroically and satisficed their all. Adventures calling for hardship toil, suffering and self-denial, have never lacked volunteers. The mighty conquests of the past —geographical, commercial, industrial, scientific—have been won by men who have dared things who have accepted the challenge of some great undertaking, and paid the cost of it.

Evangelism is the supreme task of the church It is a partnership in Jesus for the furtherance of the gospel. Whatever else the church does it of the gospel. Whatever else the church does, if it does not fearlessly and faithfully preach the gospel, it is a failure. The objective of its every effort must be to persuade men to be reconciled to God. There can be a conceptable substitute.

to God. There can be no acceptable substitute for this divinely appointed programme.

The children of this world respond more readily to their tasks, than do the children of light to the service committed to the church of God. Ventures that promise material can always tures that promise material reward can always find willing investors. It is never easy to get the average church ment ber to be a real investor in kingdom enterprises. ber to be a real investor in kingdom enterprises. There are few whose giving is an actual transaction with the Lord. Pounds for pleasure, pen nies for preaching, seems to be the motto of many. Committees face deficits, the work larguishes, opportunities are lost, all because the Lord's professed people withhold their gifts from him. "Jesus stood over against the treasure observer of the always does. He was a keen observer of realities among pretences. The best check, and realities accomposed to remember, in our giving the truest comfort to remember, in our giving the truest sees what we cast in.

The view we take of money and the use we make of it are referred to with extraordinary frequency in the New Testament, as a decisive test of Christian sincerity.

What a price the Lord paid for the church! How much is it costing us to help establish his kingdom among men? The interest we draw from kingdom among men? The interest we draw from an investment depends, in part, upon the capital an investment depends, in part, upon the capital we put in. Even so it is in the church. Many we put in Even so it is in the church. Many we put in Even so it is in the church. Any we put in Even satisfaction from their Christer gaining little of satisfaction from their charges to take possesting unselfish spirit of the Master to take possesting unselfish spirit of the Master to take possesting unselfish spirit of the Master to take possession of them. They give sparingly, and they so the Lord what belongs to him. Whether we possess little or much we are but stewards. And of our stewardship we must give account in the organ day of his appearing. great day of his appearing.

Special appeals would not be necessary if Special appeals would not be necessary if church members understood their position and privilege in the kingdom of Christ. We pay axes for earthly citizenship. The law compells that. And we must pay, too, for heavenly citizenship. The cost of the enterprise the Lord has left us to pay. His grace abounding toward us left us to pay.

makes this possible. Let Christians spend less on pleasure, on com-Let Christians spend less on pleasure, on comfort, on personal conveniences, on the things which are not essential, then will they have more to invest for God. And the returns are sure. "God so loved that he gave." "The Son of God loved... and gave." We must throw back in feble imitation that infinite giving.

This three-fold task is ours to-day. The response to the challenge calls for the deepest consponse to the challenge calls for the deepest consecration on our part. A Spirit-filled people will answer the call. In so doing what glory will come to our Lord.

The Coming World Crisis.

Speaking at a meeting of men held under the auspices of the Surrey Hills mission now being conducted by him, Bro. P. R. Baker took as his subject, "The Coming World Crisis." He said that these are portentous days through which we are passing. Mighty influences are at work, the results of which no man could prophesy. God works, however, through men; gives expression of his mind and will through men, and to every man God calls to take a certain stand for the course of the right and the truth, and against forces which would undermine the foundations of the course of the right and the truth, and against forces which would undermine the foundations of our civilisation. Unrest is rampant everywhere, even in our own country. The reformers of today are not taking this problem seriously. What a farce that civilised governments, whilst subscribing to the covenants of the League of Nations, should yet entertain seriously the scrapping of the weapons of war, whilst the best scientific brains of every country were secretly devising means yet more and more deadly for the destruction of human life in the next great clash. And all because men distrust one another! In the solution of the problem a commencement must the solution of the problem a commencement must be made with the individual. There is something wrong with the human heart. The awakening of the East with its teeming millions of people is the problem of the future. Can we imagine the problem of the future. Can we imagine what the rising of men like these would meaneven with a civilisation highly developed; yet lacking the moral force of the gospel of Christ.

Then again there is our own internal class hatred Then again there is our own internal class hatred class pitted against another. There are those amongst the presching the gospel of hate, those amongst us preaching the gospel of hate, instead of peace and goodwill; who have no reflictory teaches that when nations of the past teached such a stage, they were on the verge of teached such a stage, they were on the verge of collapse. There is no other solution for the holding of the forces of disintegration in check, both the national as well as the individual life, than ing of the forces of disintegration in check, both in the national as well as the individual life, than periments upon mankind will avail. Once accepted, man realises his responsibilities both to alone holds the key to the problem which is of our day and generation. It has never been the doubt universally—that command of our Massouli unto the ware to do unto others as they would generate the world, and the peoples of it. Christ appealed to the human heart to recognise its relationship to God. Relationship to one's fellow will be owned when man accepts the fatherhood of God. At present man is out of harmony with God's plan. What we all need to-day is the spirit of concern for others—for their soul's eternal welford the spirit of the soul's eternal welford the spirit of th fare. We need the spirit of self-sacrifice. For the sake of the boys and girls of this great free country; for the sake of the country itself; but above all, for the larger humanity we need to persevere in the uplift of the banner of the cross as the one hope of salvation for a world alienated

"I feel that I am benefiting by the course. I did not realise before that the Old Testament Scriptures were so interesting. I also feel more confident to take an active part in the church services."

"It gives me very great pleasure to write you my appreciation of your 'Preachers' Preparation Course.' It is simplicity itself. All the subjects that it treats (and there are quite a number), are so fully explained that it is impossible not to be able to grasp their meaning. It teaches the many things it is necessary to know. It inspires confidence in one's self, and does away with self-consciousness, thus making platform speaking easy."

£1/1/0 per quarter covers all costs.
